4. Administration saw no obligation to protect Castro from Cuban patriots who felt he had sold out Cuban Revolution. In view moreover of supposed bad effect in Latin America of total cancellation, the administration decided, all senior officers involved concurring, that effort should be made at mass infiltration of exiles back into Cuba.
5. This was not repeat not an invasion though so played by press. Difficulties were obviously underestimated.
6. This operation in no way comparable to Hungary or Suez. If US had intervened, obviously Castro would be through. US government stuck resolutely to determination against military intervention. US role was to lend sympathy and limited support to group of liberal Cubans.
